Horizon Milling Employee Wins Corporate Award for Outstanding Volunteerism

WELLINGTON, Kan. — Cargill recently presented a Cargill Cares Volunteer Award to Penny Giddings, an employee of Horizon Milling, in her outstanding volunteer service for giving of her time and talent to the Wellington Community Food Bank. Giddings has volunteered five years at the food bank, where she served as a member on the board and helped with a variety of activities. Giddings helped wherever her skills were needed, unloading trucks, breaking down bulk food to smaller portions for families' packages, and—when the food bank moved to a different location—helping with the move. Giddings also was vital in saving the food bank money by getting roofers to donate work for the remodeling of the new facility. Giddings was formerly an employee of Horizon Milling in Wellington. She is now working at the Horizon Milling facility in Houston, Texas.

To recognize her commitment to community, Cargill has contributed $1,000 to the Wellington Community Food Bank. Giddings is among a special group of Cargill employees and retirees around the world to receive a Cargill Cares Volunteer Award since its inception in 1998.

“Cargill encourages our employees and retirees to give back to the community and is proud of the unselfish ways in which they enrich the communities where we conduct business,” said Mark Murphy, manager of Corporate Citizenship for Cargill. “The Cargill Cares Volunteer Award program is one way we recognize and thank Cargill employees for their important contribution to our communities.”

“Penny has been a tremendous leader in this community,” said Steve Neely, facility manager for Horizon Milling in Wellington. We are pleased to recognize her for her volunteer work to help the Wellington Community Food Bank”.
